THE SILENT SILENCE.
In the deep, dark, silent night,
When all the world is fast asleep,<
I have been thinking of the past,
And how the years have slipped away.
The years that were so full of life,
And joy, and love, and hope,
And how they have all passed by,
Like the leaves of a fading flower.
And now I am left alone,
In the silent, silent night,<
Thinking of the years that are gone,
And how they have all slipped away.
And now I am left alone,
In the silent, silent night,
Thinking of the years that are gone,
And how they have all slipped away.

Novels.

THE INDIANS.

My friends, I have been thinking of the Indians, and how they have been treated in this country. I have been thinking of the years that have passed, and how they have all slipped away. I have been thinking of the years that were so full of life, and joy, and love, and hope, and how they have all passed by, like the leaves of a fading flower. And now I am left alone, in the silent, silent night, thinking of the years that are gone, and how they have all slipped away.

There were many years ago, when the first settlers came to this country, they found the Indians. They were a brave and noble people, and they were treated with respect and kindness. But as the years passed, the settlers grew more and more numerous, and the Indians were driven from their homes. They were treated with cruelty and injustice, and they were driven to the edge of the earth. They were driven from their homes, and they were driven to the edge of the earth. They were driven from their homes, and they were driven to the edge of the earth.

A piece with the history of other tribes, known to the early settlers of this country. They have never been treated with respect and kindness. They have been treated with cruelty and injustice, and they have been driven from their homes. They have been driven from their homes, and they have been driven to the edge of the earth. They have been driven from their homes, and they have been driven to the edge of the earth.

them. Those words, broken and sweet as they were, left the first deep impression that ever remained on my memory. Lead her not into temptation, but deliver her from evil. This was my mother's prayer. In that imperious tone, her gentle voice went out forever. Young and true, that prayer had entered my heart, and a solemn solemn strength. I raised my head from its beautiful resting place, and gazed awe-stricken upon the face of my mother. Oh, how an hour had changed her! The crimson flush was quenched in her cheeks, a moisture lay upon her forehead, and the grey, mysterious shadows of death were stealing over each thin feature, yet her lips still moved, and her deep blue eyes were bent on me, surcharged with spiritual brightness, as if they would have left one of their vivid, unsteady rays, as the soul of her death-bed convert. Slowly as the sunbeams pale at nightfall from the leaves of a flower, went out the starlike fire of her eyes. A mist came over them, softly as the dews might fall upon that flower, and she was dead. Even then I knew not the meaning of the solemn change. I had witnessed, but when they bore me forth from my mother's death-bed, my heart was filled with fear and mourning.

POPULAR CHEMISTRY.

"Why is our earth a globe?"
Because of the general attraction by which all its parts are drawn towards each other, that is, towards a common centre; by which means the mass assumes the spherical or rounded form.
We have interesting instances of roundness from the same cause in minute masses—as the particles of a mist of fog floating in air—there, mutually attracting and coalescing into larger drops, and then forming rain—dew-drops—water trickling on a duck's wing—tears dropping from the cheek—drops of lard—globules of mercury, like pure silver beads, coalescing when near, and forming larger ones—melted lead allowed to rain down from an elevated sieve, which by cooling as it descends, retains the form of its liquid drops, and becomes the spherical shot-lead of the sportsman.—Arnott.
"Why is the prescription of medicines by drops an unsafe method?"
Because, not only do drops of fluid from the same vessel, and often of the same fluid of different vessels, differ in size, but also drops of the same fluid, to the extent of a third, from different parts of the lip of the same vessel.
"Why do blue and yellow powders, when mixed, form a green powder?"
Because of the mere effect arising from the mixture of the yellow and blue pigments, which are independently reflected from the minute particles of each; and the proof is had by examining the mixture with a microscope, when the yellow and blue grains will be seen separately and quite unaltered.—J. P. W. Herschel.
"Why is there a difference in the specific gravity of different bodies?"
Because one body is larger, or takes up more space than another of the same weight, when the first is said to be specifically lighter than the other, and vice versa.
"Why will not oil and water mix, in any quantity, and violently shaken?"
Because the water and the oil have no affinity for each other; but if some caustic ammonia be added, and the vital then agitated, the whole will be mixed into an emulsion. This is what is called dissolving, or uniting bodies, which apparently have no tendency to unite of themselves, by the addition of another substance.
"Why do small needles float on water?"
Because the particles of water cohere among themselves, and the weight of the needles is not sufficient to overcome that cohesion.
"Why does a pound of water, and a pound of salt when mixed, form two pounds of brine, but when mixed, form less bulk than when separate?"
Because the atoms of the one are partially received into what were vacant spaces in the other. A similar condensation is observed in many other mixtures; as a pound of sugar in a pound of water. Tin and copper, melted together to form bronze, occupy less space by one fifth, than they do when separate.—Arnott.
"Why is heat produced on slacking quicklime?"
Because of the violence of the chemical action, and the solidification of the water. In this process, 35 parts of lime solidify, 32 parts of water, but a remarkable fact in making what we call lime-water, 500 parts of water are required to dissolve one part of lime.
"Why has strong salt and water a pellicle (or film) on its surface?"
Because the attraction of the saline particles for each other is becoming superior to their attraction for the water. This is the common criterion of the fitness of a solution for crystallization.
"Why do certain acids (called freezing mixtures) convert water into ice?"
Because as heat is required to convert solids into liquids, it follows that in cases of sudden liquefaction (as when the salts are dissolved in the water) cold will ensue; hence its production during the solution of many saline bodies, and hence, also, the explanation of the theory of freezing mixtures.
"Why is heat called latent?"
Because, when these liquefies a solid, or converts a liquid into vapour, the fluid of the vapour is no hotter than the solid or liquid from which it was produced, though a great deal of heat has been expended in producing this effect, and has actually entered into the substance. Hence, it continues to exist in the product, maintaining it in its new state without increasing its temperature, and is thus latent or hidden. This great discovery was made by Dr. Black, who further proved that when the vapour condenses, or the liquid freezes, this latent heat is again given out from it.
"Why does iron become red-hot by hammering?"
Because of the condensation of the metal by the force of the blow. Air may also be condensed by pressure, so as to set under fire.
"Why does ice, when heated, become water, and the water, when heated further, become steam?"
Because the continued addition of heat gradually increases the mutual distances of the constituent atoms of the ice, and their cohesive attraction is overcome; till, at length, the atoms are repelled to still greater distances, and the substance is converted into steam! Abstraction of heat causes a return of states in the reverse order; the steam when cooled, becomes ice.

"Why does a pint of water, when converted into steam, occupy nearly 2000 times the space of the water?"
Because the heat merely produces a repulsion among the particles, and by no means fills up the interstices.—Arnott.
"Why does a loose bladder, tied at the mouth, and held before a fire, gradually swell and appear fully inflated?"
Because the small quantity of air contained in the bladder is then so much dilated by the heat, that it occupies a considerably increased space, and fills the bladder, of which it before occupied only a small part.
"Why does hay, if stacked when damp, take fire?"
Because the moisture elevates the temperature sufficiently to produce putrefaction, and the ensuing chemical action causes sufficient heat to continue the process; the quantity of matter being also great, the heat is proportional.
[From the N. Y. Musical World & Times.]
THE AGE OF PROGRESS.
Look into yonder window, what do you see? Nothing new, surely;—nothing but what the angels have looked smilingly down upon since the morning stars first sang together. Nothing but a loving mother hushing upon her faithful breast a weeping babe, whose little life hangs by a slender thread, mortal life have said, this boy must die.
A mother's hope never dies.—She clasps him closer to her breast, and gazes upward;—food and sleep and rest are forgotten so that that little flickering taper, the not-out, gleams upon her soft warm breast she weeps for his baby slumbers; long weary nights, up and down the cottage floor, she paces, soothing his restless moaning. Suns rise and set; stars pile, seasons come, and go;—she heeds them not, so that those languid eyes beam brightness. Down the meadow, by the brook, on the hill side she seeks with him the health-restoring breeze.
God be praised, health comes at last! What joy to see the rosy flush mantle on the pallid cheek; what joy to see the shrunken limbs grow round with health; what joy to see the damp thin locks grow crisp and glossy! What matter, though the knitting lies neglected,—or the spinning wheel be dumb, so that the soaring kite or bounding ball but please his boyish fancy and prompt the gleeful shout? What matter that the coarser fare be here, so that the daintiest morsel pass his rosy lips? What matter that her robe be threadbare, so that his graceful limbs be clad in Joseph's rainbow coat? What matter that her eyelids be hard, so that his sunny head rest lightly on a downy pillow? What matter that her slender pulse be empty, so that his childish heart may never know denial?
Years roll on.—That loving mother's eye grows dim; her glossy locks are silvered; her limbs are sharp and shrunken; her foot steps slow and tottering. And the boy, the cheerful Joseph, he of the bold bright eye, and sinewy limb, and bounding step,—surely, from his kind hand shall flowers be strewn on the dim downward path to the dark valley.—surely, her son's strong arm be here to lean on—his voice of music sweeter to her dull ear than seraphs' singing.
No, no.—The hum of busy life has struck upon his ear, drowning the voice of love. He has become a man's refined, fastidious, and (to his forgetful, unfeeling heart) God forgive him! the mother who bore him is only—"the old woman!"—Fanny Fern.

as he was a comparative stranger, and she thought it improper to act so rashly. In vain did Mr. C. entreat her to consent, urging the peculiar predicament her refusal would place him in. She continued obstinately to refuse. The hour arrived, and the party assembled in the large parlors, and the supper table prepared. The betrothed couple were notified that all was ready, and the chagrined Mr. C. appeared in the parlor, and informed the company and the minister of what had again occurred; that the wedding would not take place, but desired that all present would partake of what had been furnished, and enjoy themselves in the best possible way. In the course of the evening the young lady appeared, and united in the hilarity of the occasion; while Mr. C., despondently, was seated in one corner of the room, at intervals receiving the sympathies of all present. The next morning the lady left for Louisville, and has not been heard of since. She is of respectable parents, and a lady of excellent reputation; but why she should conduct herself as she did is wholly unaccountable to her friends.—Cincinnati Atlas.
[If I were a farmer I would devote my whole attention to the cultivation of my farm, I would feed my servants well, take care of my stock, mend the holes in my fences, take a fair price for my produce, and never indulge in idleness and dissipation.
[If I were a physician, I would not have the conscience to charge as much as they do for feeling the pulse, extracting a tooth, taking a little blood, or administering a dose of calomel and jalap.
[If I were a merchant, I would have an established price for my goods, and not undersell or injure my neighbors. I would sell at a moderate profit, and give good measure and deal as honestly as possible.
[If I were a mechanic, I would apply myself industriously to my business, take care of my family, refrain from visiting taverns and grogshops, and when I promised a man to have his work done at a certain time I would try to be punctual.
[If I were a young man, I would not get so many ridiculous capers as some of them do, playing with their watch chains, flourishing their rattans, strutting, and making a great noise with their high-heeled boots—probably not paid for—and making remarks on plain worthy people. They render themselves contemptible in the eyes of the sensible and unassuming.
[If I were a lady I would not be seen spinning street-yarn every day, obliging this young fellow, nodding at another and giving sweet smiles to a third.
[If I were an old bachelor, I would make every exertion in my power to get married or marry myself.
[If I were a young man, I would be a good fellow, a tall Green Mountain boy, as he walked up to the bar of a fashionable hotel in New York. "What do you ask a week for board and lodging?" "Fifty dollars." "Fifty dollars? That's too much; but I'll give you a dollar for the time I am absent from dinner and supper." "Certainly, thirty-seven dollars and a half a week." "Here the conversation ended, and the Yankee took up his quarters for two weeks. During this time he lodged and breakfasted at the hotel, and did not take either dinner or supper. His business detained him in another portion of the town. At the expiration of the two weeks he again walked up to the bar, and said: "I suppose you settle that account." "I'm going in a few minutes." The landlord handed him his bill. "Two weeks board at five dollars—ten dollars." "Here the stranger, said the Yankee, "this is wrong—you've made a mistake; you've not deducted the times I was absent from dinner and supper—14 days, two meals per day, 28 meals at 37 1/2 cents each—10 dollars 50 cents. If you're not the fifty cents that I owe you, I'll take a drink and the balance in silver."

FISK'S
PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES.

THESE cases are of metal, heavily bronzed so as to be indestructible, are air tight, and so constructed as to be useful in form and preserve the body, and to be used for many years, and time without decomposition. For persons who desire to preserve the bodies of deceased friends free from the effects of water and admit of ordinary interments, or who desire to remove them to distant localities, or to preserve them for any length of time before burial, they are invaluable. Their cost is little more than that of a wooden coffin, and the weight about the same.

An absolute and elegant case may be found at Fisk's, 149 South Main Street, New York. Persons are solicited to call and examine them. Orders supplied at the shortest notice.

 THE subscriber being fully admonished to close up the business of the late firm of McDonald & Pinchback, takes this method of informing those indebted, that he is determined to close that business up by next fall, and those that observe this notice will perhaps save costs.
